According to Amir Ismail, many inhabitants are living in small tents on the wreckage of their damaged homes as winter approaches, and rebuilding efforts are practically difficult owing to a lack of finances. Amir Ismail also mentions serious food and clean water shortages caused by the blockade and criminal gangs stealing supplies, as well as a deepening healthcare crisis because most hospitals have been destroyed or are no longer functional. Amir Ismail ends by underlining the resiliency of Gaza's population and the significance of continuing to raise awareness.

Text/Transcript:

Amir Ismail¹ explains in this live update/interview from Gaza that, despite what has been termed as a "so-called" ceasefire, the situation on the ground remains exceedingly challenging. He notes that Israel continues to occupy areas of the Gaza Strip and has allegedly violated the ceasefire hundreds of times, keeping inhabitants in a state of continual uncertainty and insecurity².

In his update, he outlines the horrible living conditions endured by many inhabitants, pointing out that families are now living in small tents with little protection from the weather. With winter approaching, these frail shelters are proving insufficient, leaving many families with little alternative but to pitch their tents straight on the wreckage where their homes once stood².

Amir discusses the continuous fight to restore daily life in Gaza. He notes that residents are attempting to rebuild some kind of normalcy, frequently by repairing damaged areas or constructing temporary living spaces despite having absolutely no resources or building supplies accessible².

He also addresses the humanitarian crisis, emphasizing the serious lack of food and clean water. He claims that necessary supplies are scarce and becoming increasingly expensive as a result of the blockade, and that criminal gangs have been stealing humanitarian goods, making it even more difficult for families to obtain basic essentials².

He delves further into Gaza's escalating healthcare problem. According to his report, most hospitals have been damaged or are no longer operating, forcing medical services to rely on small medical points with scant equipment and supplies².

Amir Ismail concludes the interview by emphasizing Gazans' resiliency in the midst of these obstacles. He emphasizes the necessity of continuing to raise awareness via social media so that the reality on the ground are visible to the international community despite continuous limitations².
